

Where Should Our City Plant Its Next Ten Thousand Trees?

Write two or three lines here explaining what your article is about and why it matters.

Keep it to about forty words — this is the part that makes someone stop and read.

BY [YOUR NAME], CLASS [] · PHOTOGRAPHS BY [NAME]

YOUR MAIN PHOTOGRAPH GOES HERE
WIDE PHOTO WORKS BEST

Write a caption: what is happening in the photo, and where was it taken? Photo by [name].

Start with your best sentence. This page is laid out in two columns with a large opening letter, the way most magazines set a feature article. Click any text and type over it — everything here is a placeholder.

Keep your paragraphs short. Three or four sentences is usually enough before starting a new one.

Pick one sentence from your article that says the most, and put it here.

NAME · WHO THEY ARE

Carry on after the quote. If you need more space, make the photograph or the opening lines smaller — the page will stay tidy.

Your writing flows from the bottom of this column to the top of the next one, so a longer paragraph just moves the pictures along. The two photos below sit wherever there is room for them.

PHOTO

Caption. Photo by [name].

PHOTO

Caption. Photo by [name].

Finish with what you want the reader to remember. Everything on this page can be changed — the colours, the headings and the photo boxes.

The three numbers along the bottom are a good place for facts from your research. Swap them for whatever your article is about.

If your article is too long for one page, duplicate the page in Canva and delete the heading at the top of the second one.

2.6M

MAPPED FEATURES

5

CITIES BAKED IN

<1s

PER MAP READ